HONGHONS, APRIL 4TH, 1876.

A Reuter's telegram, elsewhere published gives some important information confirmatory and explanatory of that recently received from Shanghai through the same agency. The Treaty of 1872 between Germany and China has, it states, been renounced, and the German Minister has proposed its revision. In this he has received the support of the other Powers, and hence it would appear that there is good reason for its revision. It is possible that some flaw has been discovered in it during the negotiations in connection with the Anna affair. In the meantime, nothing has as yet transpired to show what attitude the Chinese Government have adonted on the subject. As, however, the Representative of Germany is backed up by England, Russia, and the United States in his demands. it is very unlikely that the Chinese will offer any decided resistance to them. It is tolembly certain, therefore, that they will be conceded, though porhaps very relactantly, and the revision of the Treaty also agreed upon.

The proceedings in the British Parliament in connection with the contemplated change in Her Majesry's title have throughout Courier very nearly to have reached the shares found the bundle of money also gone. been rather peculiar. We are left to infer that the above-mentioned is the one fixed upon though in one instance the culprit is in a fair way of having him atrocious title of Empress of England has been given. But this must be regarded as a slip; the House of Commons would certainly not consent to the Imperial title superseding the time-bonoured English Royal title. That is The newspapers Bernaglieré, Liberta, Vocedella The hasband of the woman saids indeed out of the question. Mr. Lows's objections to the change

MAJESTY, as Defender of the Faith, already defends three separate creeds, and that the phrase really denotes nothing and is only in interesting relic of antiquity, which it would be well perhaps, to consign to oblivion. His objection that the Colonies, especially Canada and Australia, would fool themselves passed over, though possibly less trivial, was scarcely the breast of George Boet, of the Boyal Mariner, more cogent. It would be absurd to his silver medal awarded him for his service particularise even the lealing Colonies in the title, as Mr. Anderson suggested, and if spoken of as "the Dependencies" they might not feel altogether finttend. The fact is the Colonies generally are included in the terms Great Britain and Ireland; the colonists are essentially British citizens, and would probably resent any attempt to disassociate them from the close ties which at present hind them to the which the Member for London University made was when heargued that nothing should be said about India in the Queen's title, lest that country should some day be wrested. course there is such a possibility; throughout the world's history empires have rises prove no exception to the hitherto invariable rule. Still it was most unvise, most im-THE VARIOUS HOUSE FLAGS politic, to allude to such a centingency in a debate in the British Parliament. India bas been won, for the most part, by the sword, and if necessary will be retained by sword. But it is the carnost desire of English English rule in India may become really popular among the natives, and streamons efforts are being made to convince the latter to the utmost of their ability. The arguments used by Mr. Forster were not much more to the point than those employed by Mr. Lowe. It is absurd to plead that because the title of Empress is of despotic origin it should not be used in connection with India: It is useless to attempt todeny the fact—India is despotically governed, and must be so for an indefinite period. That objection is therefore not only sentimental but foolish. Taken altogether, it is difficult to characterise the opposition offered to the Bill as anything less than livigious and obstructive. It was advisable that some addition should be made to the Queen's title, and that of Empress of India is as free from objection as anything that could be suggested. The Times suggests that Her Majesty should be styled Queen of India, on the ground that the adoption of the NINGPO...... Mesers. not necessarily, we should imagine, at least in Great Britain. And even if this had to be 1875, and was again sentenced to three months' spondent. done, it would not surely be a very serious matter. However it may be, the Bill is pretty certain to become hw, in spite of Lord Shaffesbury's threatened amendment. Having passed the Commons there is little fear of its being rejected by the Peers. We do not believe that it will be found fault with in any of the Colonies, while in India it will be sure to create satisfaction. It was evidently first conceived as part of the policy of conciliation which the British Government months hard labour. SANFRANCISCO Mr. L. P. > WRECK OF THE BARQUE "ANNIE MABEL "OF SHANGEAL.

Shortly after daybreak on Thursday morning. s small gig with six of the crew of the Annie Mabel (Captain Ponting), 270 tons, belonging to Mesera, Morris and Co., of Shanghal, entered the river, with the intelligence that at a quarter. pest mue o'clock on Sunday night the barque struck a sunten rook a few miles South west of the North Saddler, and sank almost immediately, allowing only sufficient time for the crew to take to the boats. She left Newcastle, New Bouth Wales, with coal on the 8th c February, and at the time she struck the rock, a fresh breeze was bliwing, but there was no fog, and littlesearunning. The longbost and gig were lowered and left thevessel with all hands a short time before she disappeared beneath the waves. The longboat was occupied by the captain, his wife, the sering's wife and hor three children, and six Malay sea men: while thegre was under the charge of John Laurence, chief officer, who had with him the serang and four Malay seamen. The two boats kept together until Monday evening at seven o'clook, when Laurence told Captain Ponting that it was his intention to make for land. The boats then appear to have parted company, and Laurence states that about three o'clock the following morning be sighted land, but was unable to reach it on account of the heavy sen. It was his intention to have gone ashore and lit a fire to attract assistance, While attempting to make the land, he (Laurence) saw a junk in the distance and with difficulty managed to row to it, and he and his exhausted companions were taken on board by the Chinese, who silowed them to partake of their rice and the other kinds of food they had in the junk. Laurence states that they had not time to provision the bonts before the sbip sank, and therefore the hospitality of the Chinese was most acceptable. Laurence and the Malay scamen again took to the gig, and as above stated reached Shanghal on Saturday morning. The seaman were taken to the Sailors' Home, and Laurence after communicating with the owners of the barque, reported himself at the English Consulate, where, later in the day, he made the following statement before Mr. W. Each presents a Obristian maiden loved by a Pagun youth, who is converted through her agency; each presents, also, u persecuting Roman governor, and each ends with a martyrdom. The great point of difference is that, whereas in "St. Cecilia" the means of conversion are an outburst of heavenly music, in "St. Dorothea" the end is gained by a presentation of miraculous fruit and flowers .- Concordia.

In Cincinnati, on the 12th February, the Opera House, an allegory of the Great Republic was being performed for the benefit of the Poor Relief Fund: According to a Times telegram, several hundred public school obildren took part in the performance on the stage, while the house was closely packed with a large undience, mainly consisting of women and children. Scarcely had the performance begun when a cry of "Fire" was raised without any reuson, cassing a panic and a stampeds for the doors. For several minutes horrible scenes occurred in the entries and on the stairways, people being crashed to death, trumpled upon, thrown down the stairs, many jumping from the galleries and upper stories upon the crowds below. Elever persons were killed and about turrty injured.

FOLK-LORE AND BEES. Bees are credited with a perfect comprehension of all that men do and utter, and her like a rat, and threatened to pitch her as members themselves of the family they belong to, they must be treated in every way as human in their emotions. French "Perhaps the most amusing tale is that of children are taught that the inmales of the facts leads to the explanation above suggested; for not to dwell on the fact that in some places in England they are informed of wed dings as well as of funorals and their hives are decorated with favours as with crape, the touds in some parts not only to other animals as well, but, in addition, to inanimate things. In Lithuania, deaths, are aunounced, not custom is reported from Dartford, in Kert having told it of his wife's death. In Corn. not only must the bees be moved, but the wine and vinegar must be shaken, if it is wished that they shall not turn bad Near War temburg, the win gar must be shaken; the bird cage hung differently, the cattle tied up differently, and the beshive transposed. Near Ausbach the flower-pots must also be moved, and the wine casks knocked three times , while at Gerosheim, not only must the wine in the collar be shaken to prevent it turning sour, but the corn in the loft must be moved if the sown corn is to sprout. But all these customs are too much alike to be unrelated, and too widely spread to have and instructed at the fathers' expense. The we read from the pen of a contemporary that pasified by kind treatment, since, according site for a second Trappist establishment had "she was full of good sense and uncommon us their several temperaments predisposed
